IN WORLD CHEERED BY NATION

President Wilson and President Poincare of France riding through Paris streets on Wilson's arrival in the French capital.

Heavily Fortified Island May Be Turned Into Resort Under Direction of British Was Submarine Base.

LONDON, Jan. 1.—The little island of Heigoland may play a considerable part in the settlement of peace. Its occupation, according to the terms of the armistice is to be optional. It is certain, however, that it will be mentioned in the peace terms and it is not at all improbable that it will be regained by England.

There is an impression abroad that at present it is a naval base of importance. This, however, in wrong. The Germans have beavily fortified it in order to prevent its selature by any nation with which the former German empire might be at war. For in the hands of an enemy power it would be a direct menace to Hamburg, Brunsbuttel and Bremen.

Doubtless, as the power of artillery has increased, there has been an effort to utilize it as a defense against all the principal approaches to the German and the part of the par the Elbe or the Weser, however, do not seriously come under its fire.

Heavy fortifications do not constitute a haval base, and Helgoland's sole oriention to the possession of a naval base, lies in its small artificial harbor, which has been used as the base of a couple of flotilias of submarines. Here the old cruber Sophie, 2,150 tons, aunched in 1851, has been moored as a mother ship.

Larger vessels have been unable to

Had Helgoland been British at the segimning of the war and had it been ortifled with British guns it is diffimit to see what would have taken in the see what would have taken here would have been a decisive fleet setton over it.

Project Received.

Project Received.

In 1883 Germany becan maneuvering to secure it. She was then trying to foil England in Africa and suggested the exchange of Helgoland in return for complaisance in regard to Zanzibar. Bismarck announced, furthermore, that Germany intended to construct a canal to the Baltic which, he said, would offer great advantages to England, and that for the protection of this canal (the Kiel canal) Germany was ready to construct a harbor and fortifications on Helgoland, the advantages of both to be given freely to English as well as German vessels.

The project fell through in 1883, but was revived in 1830. Bismarck offered in exchange for Helgoland that Germany would not oppose a British protectorate of Zanzibar, and Lord Salisbury made a speech in parliament which has been quoted widely since the present war began. Of what use, he asked, was such a harborless unfortified rock as Helgoland to Great Britain? If Britain were at war with Germany it could easily be captured and Britain exposed thereby to grave humiliation.

He wound up by hoping that "the conflict."

The cession of Helgoland to Germany in 1890 created the dildest enthusiasm in that country. The kaiser set sail at once, attended by the fleet to take formal sovereignty and to begin the fortification of Helgoland. What had been a watering place was now converted into the greatest fortess the world has ever known, where, from that day to this, no alien has ever stepped.

Kaiser's Hobby.

When the peace conference meets the problem of Helgoland will be one of the thousands of problems to come before it. No injustice will be done if England again gains control of it. The forts will be dismantled and the soldiers who have manned them will be sent away. And there will be few persons left on the little rock to care about its future. The bathing machine will go back and Helgoland will once again become a pleasure spot in the North sea.

sea.

Doubtless the new Germany which is coming into being will be glad to see it go. It was one of the late kaiser's greatest hobbies. "Today this trousers button holds our whole suit together," he said a year ago, in referring to Hel-goland.

he said a year ago, in referring to Helgoland.

Proof against attack from the sea,
it has vertably been an impregnable outpost for the German navy in this war. Back of it the Elbe and the Klel canal have been immune from allied attack. German submarines have enjoyed twice the liberty they would have en-joyed had Helgoland been in English hands, and the kaiser had almost succeeded in his pleasant dream of making the Baltic a Prussian lake. STRIKE STOPS CARS.

MILWAUKEE, Wis., Jan. 1.—Not a street car is moving in Milwaukee to-day, the result of a suspension of work by about 1.600 motermen and conductors, following the failure of the Milwaukee Elegfric Railway and Light company to grant an increase in wages. The strikers are members of the Employes' Mutual Benefit association, an organization within the company.
